Chapter 1 by Garryn Fulcomer

I hold my breath as I sink further and further down. I gave up trying to kick ages ago. The memory of hopping to my doom still branded into my thoughts. My head tightened and I screamed, water flooded into my mouth and my lungs burn at contact. I try one last time to kick again but the ropes dig in further. And the salt burns. I scream once again desperate to end my suffering, but the pain didn't come. My hands which were once behind my back come free and so do the ropes on my legs. I screamed with the pain that quickly subsided. The culprit swam around me and kissed. Death seemed to leave and life extended. I open my eyes and in front of me is a girl with brown hair floating above her like a crown. She grabs my hand and pulls me along with her. I notice that my savior has no legs, but a long tail, iridescent in the blue surrounding us. I gasp half expecting water to rush in but, it never comes.
